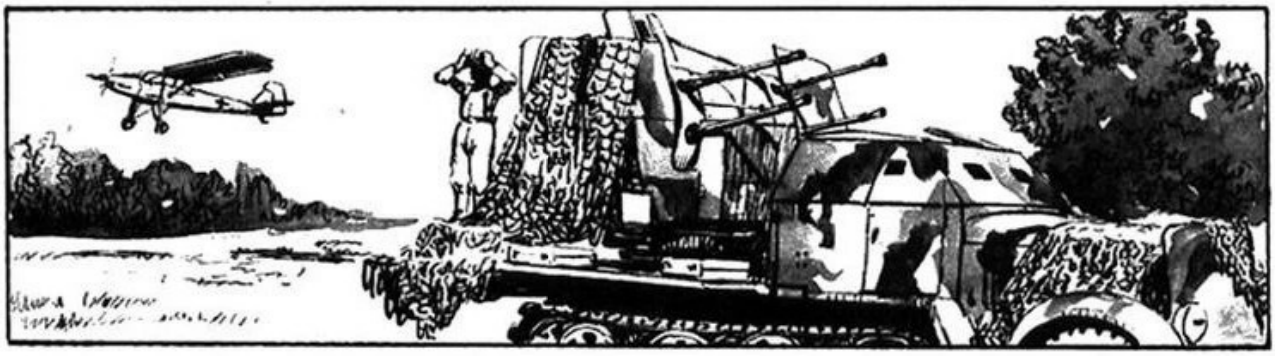
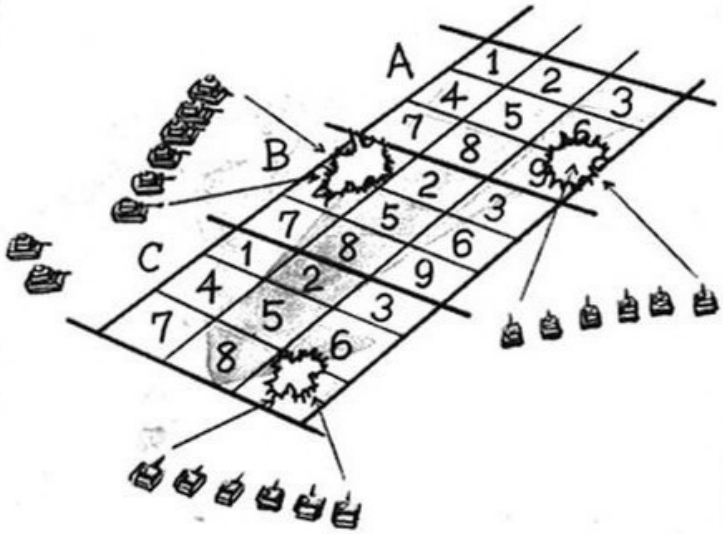
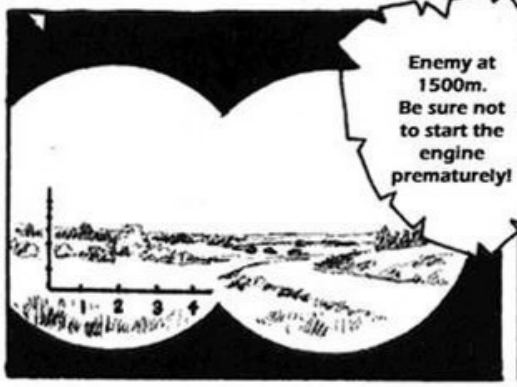
Episode 11
Deadly Pakfront Bombardment



Meanwhile, the Black Knights had camouflaged itself with its surroundings.

The Black Knights were lying in wait to spring an ambush. For inexperienced tank crews, this was the safest and most effective method of engaging the enemies. The company was divided up into platoons, who would each be assigned a fire-zone. When any enemy tanks entered that zone, all guns would concentrate fire to eliminate them almost instantly. This system of zoning and concentrated-fire was known as the PaKfront, one of the most effective tactics for panzer divisions in the war.





The silhouettes of T-34s filled the periscope's view. The best view for a gunner.

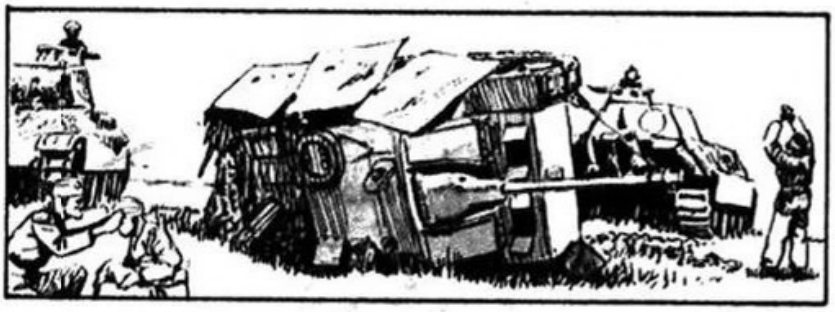
Sorry to leave the knights of the round table hanging for so long. Let us handle things here.



Corporal, what is Gelb platoon's casualty report?

Only a few lightly wounded, sir!

Good work, soldier!
